ABSTRACT

A method and device for return instruction prediction in microprocessors and digital signal processors. The method and device uses a return target buffer, in which a return instruction address table serves to store addresses of return instructions, and a return target stack is used to store target pointers of return instructions, thereby correct prediction results can be provided in the fetch stage of a pipeline.